Not illustrated. 1898 Excerpt: .question of one-cent letter postage is based absolutely upon equity and justice. If it were not, I should not be advocating it to-day, because my own personal interest in it is too trivial. When we bear in mind something of the injustice to the people to whom letter postage is a burden, then we can ask for this important change. I will say that there is not the slightest hope of getting it for some years to come. But, at all events, we can express our belief in the prompt advocacy of it, and if the deficit became larger for the first year or two, and Congressional attention became thereby attracted to the real cause of the deficit, then we should be accomplishing a result from one-cent letter postage which would be more valuable possibly than we can suspect to-day. That is the position of the...
