Plan sponsors in our sample paid less than 10 percent of the originally calculated additional contribution amount to their underfunded plans, and these contributions reduced total underfunding in the plans receiving them by less than 3 percent. As a result, the additional contribution provision advanced few underfunded plans toward full funding. Our examination of the current additional funding rules revealed a design flaw in the offset that makes it too large for many underfunded plans. However, simply correcting that flaw will not result in...
