The general policy of the Government as regards irrigation is not so much to undertake large State schemes, but rather to foster private enterprise and co-operative enterprise. At the present time it must be realised that our policy is the best, considering the conditions here. We have a very small population in relation to the size of the country, and market conditions are abnormal. We have no home market at all. and it takes very little to glut such market as we have. Unless produce is produced which can be exported, the people cannot get rid of it. At present I think there can be no question that this country, as a whole, must be considered mainly as a pastoral one, and its future, I think, largely lies in that direction, so that irrigation is to a very large extent an adjunct to stock farming, and in that...
