We still have mild weather, field flowers in bloom, --no frosts; and the ducks have almost departed, to return with the ice and snow, borne to us on the wings of the north wind. Please start it. Yesterday Will and I started, with our hand-cart loaded with decoys, to the large shallow ponds formed by the rain on the sandy plain next to the beach. We had two boatmen to assist, and made a funny procession, I occasionally riding on the top of the load, for the walk was long. We set out our decoys, and dug two holes in a sand hillock deep enough to conceal us; but the day was too bright for the success we expected; the birds flew wide of us, and our bag was only five swan, two geese, and six ducks. Don t mention this hand-cart expedition to my worthy and too conventional friends and neighbors, lest I lose all my respectability. Very affectionately yours. January 24, 1890. Dearest Hal: Your charming letter preceded by a day. Boston seems ever to be your perihelion from which you draw new heat for your affections and new stimulus for your mind. Of course, I would gladly have you here always, --but, for your own good, not yet. Wait awhile till you have acquired something like a national reputation, with the certainty of being welcomed into any field of professional enterprise that you may prefer. I...
