It is fomewhat paradoxical what objection the moft prudent landlord can have to borrowing a fum of money for an improvement in hufbandry. It is fo extremely common for all other purpofes, that no good reafon can be given for this particular exception. However, the improvements that are attempted with annual fums, unlefs they amount to an equality with the fums fketched above, can never turn out half fo profitable. It is for thefe reafons, that I value my new-improved grafs at 20 s. an acre; the languid improvements riling to 15 J. would juftify my ftating a much higher rent, but I am defirous of being moderate in fuch articles. Objections ought never to be raifed againft a fpirited conduct in matters of this fort, becaufe uncommon: moors have not been improved in fo fhort a time, therefore fome will...
